Several members of the Limestone College men's basketball team have spent a considerable amount of time working with students from Limestone Elementary. The Saints' Head Coach Brandon Scott hopes this program can impact all parties involved.

"It is always such a great experience giving back to the community. Our players have done a great job mentoring." commented Scott.

Michael Barrett, Wayne Staggers, Marvin Fleming, and Stewart Clark, along with assistant coaches Jake Pickett and Marquintus Jones, spend every Thursday at the school. Guard Bobby Grier also participated in the program during the fall semester.

"They seem to really be building some relationships with their students," said Scott.

During their time at the school, the Saints mentor students in different subject areas and assist with various activities such as reciting multiplication tables and completing word searches.

"Mentoring the elementary school kids is great! I love the fact that the kids always take advantage of the opportunity and time that we spend with them," said Jones.

The Saints are very appreciative of the opportunity to become involved with Limestone Elementary as they continue to make an effort to give back to the community.
